

In order to prove that LTLF is a fanzine like no other and is not afraid to tackle tough issues (not to mention incur a few law suits), we proudly present...

The questions nobody dares to ask!

Pierre, could we interest you in a VIP public appearance in Nottingham?

Gary, we'd like you to make a fly-on-the-wall documentary about you for the BBC. Our cameras will trail you for a month and follow your fortunes as Forest manager. The only problem is, the programme will be broadcast before the watershed, so you can't swear...

Adam Nowland, I'm a product developer at Boots, we have a new range of quick-healing plasters and bandages, would you be interested in testing them?

Nigel, go on, admit it, you're going to be a much better manager than your dad ever was!

Larry Lloyd, your supposed hatred for David Platt is really a way of masking the fact that you are secretly in love with him. Isn't it about time you opened up to your repressed homosexuality?

Hello, Mr Doughty. I understand you'd rather give your money to charity than footballers. Well I'm from Oxfam, campaigning against sweatshop labour in third world countries, and we wondered if you'd be willing to donate?

Mr Atkinson – this is the UK branch of the Ku Klux Klan would you be interested in being our patron?

Gordon Taylor, don't you agree that footballers are getting paid too much these days?

Hey, Mr Arthur. My name is Malcolm Glazer. I heard about your terrific marketing slogans. I need to dupe a load of Manchester United fans into thinking that I really care about their stupid soccer team – any ideas?

Mr King, we have some new ultra-high security wheel-nuts for the latest generation of super-bling gold alloy spinner wheels – would you be interested in testing them for us?

Mr Platt, this is Channel 4. We'd like you to appear in the next series of Celebrity Faking It – we will get somebody to train you for a fortnight to see if you can convince people you are a real football manager...

Councillor Collins, surely the City of Nottingham would be better served by closing a few schools in order to pay off the debt owed by Forest for the Trent End?
